In most industrialized countries, dinner is the most reliable way for humans to connect and find out what's going on with each other.

Sitting down for a nightly meal is great for the brain, the body, and the spirit.

Kids who eat dinner with their loved ones experience less stress and have better relationships with them.

In a recent survey, American teens were asked when they were most likely to talk with their parents. Dinner was their top answer.

Children who eat regular family-style dinners consume more fruits, vegetables, vitamins, and micronutrients, as well as fewer fried foods and soft drinks.
